29th & 30th November 2007

Focus

TERNZ will provide a forum for enquiry into learning and teaching in the New Zealand tertiary sector. It aims to support and develop a community who share a common interest in research. At a time when universities and polytechnics are under considerable external pressure to change, it will provide an opportunity to step back and examine the direction in which education is moving, and the means by which practitioners might influence that direction. A distinctive feature of the conference is the emphasis on creating time for discussion and space for reflection. We aim to continue a discussion which transcends disciplinary boundaries, and to promote further exploration of a research approach to teaching and learning.

Organisation

The conference is highly participatory. Sessions are of two kinds: host sessions and workshops. Host sessions are groups which meet three times during the conference to discuss issues of common interest and share responses to the various parallel workshop sessions. Workshops (which may also take the form of open discussion around a theme or other activity) can cover any area within tertiary education research.

Workshop Themes?

There are no set themes for workshops. However we would envisage that contributors would wish to explore current, new thinking and controversial and unresolved issues within teaching and learning in tertiary education.

There will be several workshops on different topics running in parallel and it is envisaged that delegates will be able to match their interests. A list of workshops will be posted on the web site in advance of the conference.
